MONTHLY RETROSPECT OF POLITICS.

AT the conclusion of the last month we looked forward to the present with an indescribable sensation of mixed hopes and fears. After the great potentates (whose meeting at Erfurth, seemed like the conjunction of two planets hostile to human repose) had separated, to put into execution the plans there meditated, we thought ere this that the mighty and full-charged machine would have exploded. Yet whether these conjunctions be favourable or foreboding to the best interests of humanity, whether such machines be really infernal, or fraught with blessings to mankind, it is, perhaps, premature, peremptorily to decide. We live in a region of clouds, situated far below the clear and serene observatory of the philosophic historian, who will be enabled to form a better judgment of the real nature of such events, by having observed their consequences. The fate of Europe is still in suspense. Schemes big with the fate of Empires, require time to develope. But though the grand decision of the political liberty of Europe is still undetermined, much has occurred worthy of reflection. Portugal has changed masters; Spain still makes vigorous and persevering efforts at emancipation; Austria seems to have had a wish to prepare for some new convulsion; Turkey rouses its mighty resources; Russia perseveres in the scheme traced by its coadjutor in the west; Sweden still attempts resistance; England calls out with increasing importunity for inquiry and justice; Ireland is SILENT. All form a group to strike us with awe and astonishment; each figure presents itself in a new attitude, equally capable of arresting our attention.

PORTUGAL.

When this country had been liberated from the yoke, we were led to expect important changes in its internal arrangements. A change has taken place, great, important and impressive, a change of masters. The English have expelled the French, and assumed their place. General Hope succeeds to Junot, and British soldiers are employed in place of their predecessors, as arguments in the hands of the military ruler of the day, to demonstrate the blessings derived to the people from their present government. That the people have benefitted by the change there is little doubt. The cool, systematic temperament of their present governors is, certainly, more acceptable to the feelings of a haughty, though indolent nation, than the domineering vanity of their former masters. They are not plundered, nor
